Turn the chair bolts with extra nuts on the clamps. Check it for legroom, imbalance, density etc. Put a pillow over it for cushioning. My child is three years old and about 15 kg in weight. I have been using it for about 4 - 5 months now with no problems. When you drive alone, it just loosens by loosening those two bottom notes. It's a great feeling when I go on a ride with my kid. Give it a try... No matter how much you adore your kids (and no matter how ready you are to stop forking over the big money for diapers), almost no parent is looking forward to the potty training process. It's a huge task. Peeing and poo end up in places where they shouldn't (like, really not), the laundry is endless, the carpet will never be the same again, and everyone's patience will be pushed to the limit. However, toilet training is a major milestone in every toddler's life, and will be worth all the effort you put in. As a pro mom told me when I was desperate to train my (very stubborn) son, he won't go to college in diapers! Having the right equipment can make a big difference in how the potty training process is going for your family. Imagine approaching a toilet that is higher than your navel, and you may be able to sympathize with how your toddler feels about the toilets of the adult world. Then there's the loud flushing sounds, and the sight of things just carried away to who-knows-where (does that thing swallow kids, or just toilet paper? They're not so sure yet). A potty chair or chair size just for them can give your toddler a great confidence boost as they tackle the process of ditching diapers for underwear. You have this, and we're here to help. So take a deep breath (or grab a big drink), and read on for our top recommendations in toddler jar chairs and chairs! While many of us prefer to minimize the baby stuff, a toddler potty chair or chair is a very valuable investment. Accidental tumble into the toilet can be all it takes to scare your toddler away from the porcelain throne for a good long time. (And who can blame them?!) In addition to making your child child safer, a toddler-proportioned jar can help with the ergonomics of the go. With their legs at an angle of 90 degrees (or even slightly crouched), feet flat on the floor or a footstool, and sitting safely will help your child move their bowels more easily. Plus, sitting way up high with legs dangling and hanging on for sweet life is just not comfortable, especially for a newbie. While children have no bowel and bladder control until after the age of 18 months, you start exposing them to their potty at any age. Depending on your potty training approach, it may help some children to become familiar with their own potty seat or chair in advance. When your child starts showing signs of toilet training readiness, you start including sitting on the potty in their daily routine. Equipped with lots of patience, some books, and cups of their favorite beverage, you will see them begin to understand the thrill of going into the jar. Not to mention, many toddlers feel a sense of pride in having their own potty, or love to copy their parents by sitting on the big potty (complete with toddler chair, of course). A toddler toilet seat is a removable chair that sits right on top of your regular toilet seat. It is size for a toddler's bum, and can have features such as handles or a splash guard to provide added safety for your little one. A toilet seat option is much easier when it comes to clean-up because you have to wash away waste as opposed to potty chairs, which is a bowl that needs to be dumped and wiped out - amazingly, cleaning a bowl of toddler poo might be worse than changing diapers. A potty chair is a freestanding little potty of some kind. It can look like a bowl or an actual little toilet. This option can feel much less intimidating to your child than climbing a step stool to sit on a full-size toilet. As a general rule of thumb, toddlers younger than 2 or 2 1/2 years often seem to prefer potty chairs, while toddlers who are 2 1/2 to 3 1/2 years old seem to prefer the use of the adult jar. But just as every child is ready to train at a different age, each child can have their own preference for a chair or chair. The main features are safety, security and child call. If your child feels safe using their toilet (chair or chair) and thinks it's fun and exciting, you've already won half the battle. In addition, it may be useful to take your toddler with you to choose his or her special jar. They might be proud to choose and use their specific jar or toilet seat, which will only make your job easier. If you are a toddler who especially wants to be like mom and dad, or observes older siblings, you lean towards a toilet seat with a corresponding step stool. It is A personal decision based on your bathroom setup, your individual child, and your own preferences.
